CHUCK LATHAM'S CHARLTON HISTORY—FACTS and LEGEND

THE FARM COMMUNITY AND FARMING IN CHARLTON, SARATOGA CO., NY CIRCA 1900

Written by William Lane Cavert, 1958 for his grandchildren
Provided to us by Helen Alexander and Linda Forbess (con't)

The Agriculture: The agriculture of the Charlton Community centered around dairy cows, hay and apples. In my early youth, the customary way of handling the dairy was to take the milk to the cheese factory about 2½ miles distant from the Cavert farm when it operated (from about May 1 to November 1). The rest of the year butter was made at home. The cream was secured either by raising the cream in shallow pans or by mixing it with an equal portion of cold water. In the latter case it was put in a round tin can that had a spigot at the bottom for drawing of the milk and water mixture, after the cream had risen to the top. There was a small glass perhaps 1" x 3" in the lower part of the can so one could see only when cream was left in the can. The dairy herds were small. Eight cows were the standard number on the Cavert farm. Perhaps the biggest herd among the patrons of the cheese factory was 15 cows.

Herds of 6 to 10 cows were most common. Sufficient calves were raised for replacement.

Perhaps, it was about 1905 when our neighbors and we had an opportunity to sell milk in the Schenectady fluid milk market. As I recall it, the price was 80 cents per 10-gallon can above hauling. This would be two cents per quart or about 93 cwt. The milk was sold without adjustment for butterfat content. By present standards, the milk was unfit for human consumption. There was either none or only a perfunctory inspection by the City health authorities. Barn sanitation left much to be desired. The milk was cooled by setting the cans in a tub of cold well water. In warm weather cooling was hastened by stirring with a dipper. Testing of cattle for tuberculosis and brucellosis had not been heard of in that community. The cattle were mostly of Jersey, Guernsey, and Holstein breeding but after a fluid milk market developed, Holsteins rapidly took the lead. On the Cavert farm, cattle were watered by pumping water by hand with a chain pump from a well perhaps 20 feet deep and about five feet in diameter that was walled with stone. In Summer, the cattle had water in the pasture.
